

Here is the aggregation of the feedback I received for my website through a Google Drive form. This feedback was helpful because it confirmed to me that my website was easily accessible, visually pleasing and the artifacts were helpful to those who navigated through it. Upon hearing that my home page was not as welcoming as it could be, I revised the text in order to better explain my use of my GoAnimate avatar and how GoAnimate could be used with students.

Creating a form on Google Docs was incredibly easy. It allows for multiple types of questions that can be catered according to the type of information you are trying to gather. The form I created used mostly scales, rating 1 as low and 5 as high. Using Google Docs was helpful because all the information was anonymous and was sent to my own Google account, which can be accessed from any computer.

I used surveys on both my ICT website and teacher website because feedback from my audience is necessary for improvement. Because these websites are not created for me but people I am interacting with on a professional basis (my students, my employers and parents), it is paramount that I cater the information I offer and the mediums I use to their needs and interests. Using this form for collect peer reviews was helpful and I believe that allowing anonymity gave my classmates the opportunity to be as honest as possible.

Is the navigation on my website clear?	Is the site well-organized?	Is the home page welcoming?	Is the website visually appealing?	Are all the artifacts present?	What do you think of the "About Me" Prezi?	Would you have done something different for the "About Me" artifact?	Is the twitter feed helpful?	Was the Brain Learning video well-presented?	Was my IWB lesson well-presented?	Was my digital identity GoAnimate welcoming?	How accessible was my contact information?
